Employee Business Briefing: Executive Committee Discusses Merger Announcement

At an Employee Business Briefing yesterday, Merck's Executive Committee made the most of their first opportunity to speak to Merck employees about the recently announced Merck Schering-Plough merger agreement.

A Compelling Combination

Merck Chairman, President and CEO Dick Clark spoke about the value of the planned merger, highlighting the areas of Schering-Plough's business that complement Merck's. These include:

- a diversified product portfolio across important therapeutic areas;
- a strong presence outside the U.S., particularly in emerging markets;
 - a well-developed pipeline; and

A Broad Portfolio

Ken Frazier, executive vice president and president, Global Human Health (GHH), discussed the tremendous opportunities an expanded portfolio will create for our sales representatives. This is particularly true for the therapeutic areas – like Respiratory and Women's Health – where sales reps will be able to provide physicians with multiple options for their patients' needs.

At the same time, Schering-Plough has significant market presence in the emerging markets where Merck has been looking to expand. The combination of an increased product portfolio and a broader reach create an environment that is well-aligned with GHH's new business model.

ITPS ("It's the Pipeline, Stupid!")

Executive Vice President and President of Merck Research Laboratories Peter S. Kim took some liberties with an old adage to make a simple point regarding the importance of a robust pipeline. He expressed excitement about the opportunity to merge Merck's leadership in key research areas with the innovation of Schering-Plough. Peter stressed that the caliber of Schering-Plough's scientists and the complementary nature of the two companies' pipelines is remarkable.

Although both companies have been focusing in the same therapeutic areas, there is very little overlap in the mechanism of actions they've been studying. Peter was most enthusiastic about the therapeutic areas where both companies have made first-to-market discoveries, and believes the combined company will have the best pipeline in the industry "by far."

An Expanded Manufacturing Network

The Merck Manufacturing Division (MMD) is looking forward to integrating Schering-Plough's operations with Merck's existing manufacturing capabilities. Executive Vice President and President of MMD Willie Deese said that Merck will achieve even greater synergies by applying its lean manufacturing and sourcing strategies throughout an expanded network.

Good Financial Sense

In his remarks, Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer Peter Kellogg explained that the merger will be "accretive" to Merck's shareholders. Accretion refers to our ability to deliver better earnings as a combined company (with Schering-Plough) than as a stand-alone company.

In addition to the shareholder value, Peter explained that the merger is not expected to impact the company's credit ratings and it is expected to generate additional cash flow by 2013, giving the company access to cash for long-term investments.

100 Pages of Legal Language in 5 Minutes

Executive Vice President and General Counsel Bruce Kuhlik delivered a quick review of the more than 100-page merger agreement. One of the topics he covered was the "reverse merger" process. This process will bring Merck and Schering-Plough together in several steps. They include:

1. Merck & Co., Inc. will become a subsidiary of Schering-Plough.
2. Schering-Plough will be renamed "Merck."
3. Dick Clark will be the leader of the new Merck.
4. Shares for the new "Merck" will be issued to existing Merck shareholders.

Integration of Sites and Systems

Global Services will be responsible for integrating the systems and technologies of the two separate companies. Executive Vice President, Global Services, and Chief Information Officer Chris Scalet confirmed that the U.S. launch of COMET and the global launch of Hire-to-Retire remain on track, with just 116 days until "go live" on July 6. Other projects, including the planned launches of COMET in EMEAC and APAC, will be delayed until a more detailed assessment can be completed.

People Principles

Like Merck, one of Schering-Plough's greatest assets is the talent of its workforce. Mirian Graddick-Weir, executive vice president, Human Resources, shared her excitement over our opportunity to benefit from the talents and capabilities that Schering-Plough's people will bring to the combined company.

During the integration, the chief focus will be on retaining and deploying Schering's top talent and making sure that we integrate their people, the majority of whom will join Merck colleagues in the combined company, across every division and function. We are also instituting an immediate hiring freeze in both companies, except for "critical jobs."

By adhering to the principles of Respect for People and Open and Transparent Communications, Mirian believes we can help set Merck and Schering-Plough up for a successful integration.

What Comes Next

The new company is expected to be created by the end of 2009. Adam Schechter, president, Global Pharmaceuticals, GHH, will lead the integration team for Merck. Merck's Executive Committee will become the management team for the new company, with Dick Clark assuming leadership.
