Dr. Reddy s Laboratories to present at American Heart Association Scientific Sessions

Atlanta, US and Hyderabad, November 6, 2003:

An abstract describing preclinical research in Dr. Reddy s atherosclerosis therapeutics program has been selected for presentation on November 9, 2003 at the annual American Heart Association Scientific Sessions in Orlando, Florida.

Atherosclerosis is a disease in which blood-transporting arteries, which are clogged, cause major cardiovascular complications such as heart attacks and stroke. Current treatment strategies for atherosclerosis are indirect and partially effective.

The presentation by Dr. Reddy s will describe scientific findings on a new approach to treatment of atherosclerosis. Company scientists through drug discovery research have determined that regulating the expression of a specific protein called perlecan can provide direct protection against this disease. The company s presentation at this meeting will describe proof of concept experiments which show that controlling expression of perlecan is effective against atherosclerosis in preclinical models of disease.

The American Heart Association Scientific sessions are the premier meetings for presentation of new scientific information on cardiovascular disease and novel therapeutic approaches to cardiovascular disease.

Dr. Reddy s Laboratories conducts its drug discovery research activities in facilities at Hyderabad and Atlanta and has discovery programs in the areas of metabolic disorders, cardiovascular disease, oncology, anti-infectives and inflammation.
